Notes

Introduction

This book includes word lists, rhyming lists, and sentence pages to help students learn the vowel patterns found in the text of beginning reading material. Students learn the sound for each pattern by studying a key word and picture, and then use this sound to read new words and sentences. Students may also spell the words or sentences from dictation. This will help to cement the pattern in the student's memory.

Rhyming lists can be very helpful for students who are learning to read because it helps them look beyond single letter units. The student learns to recognize a word "chunk," consisting of the vowel pattern and any consonants that follow. In teaching jargon, this part of the word is called the "rime." By substituting different consonants at the beginning of these word chunks, the student can read many new words easily. The beginning consonant or consonants in a word are called the "onset."

In this book, the rime chunks for each phonogram pattern are listed on houses grouped together on a page. The student should read the rime chunks from the houses before attempting to read the word lists that follow. The teacher should model as needed.

The rhyming words are listed in columns, so that the identical rhyming chunks in each list are aligned vertically, one below the other. This emphasizes the fact that the ending chunk in every word in a list is the same. Reading the rhyming lists will help the student to understand the relationship between visual letter patterns and the oral pronunciation of words.

Word lists for most of the vowel patterns are also repeated as non-rhyming lists. This can be an alternate starting point for studying the pattern, or can be used as a follow-up after students have practiced reading the rhyming lists.

Some of the sound patterns found in the trade books don't lend themselves to rhyming lists. Others do rhyme, but there are very few words with the rhyming pattern. These patterns are presented as non-rhyming lists only.

Some words are marked with a small x above one of the letters. Explain to the student that this indicates that the marked letter is silent, and should not be pronounced. For example, in the word lamb, a small x is placed above the b.

Sometimes, a letter or group of letters in a word doesn't represent the expected sound. Words containing letters which "break the rules" are marked with an asterisk. Be sure to model the correct pronunciation of this type of word when introducing it to the student.

In some words, a small letter is placed above a pattern to indicate that its pronunciation will be different from the expected sound. For example, in the word said, an e is placed above the ai, to represent the short e sound.

The sentences for patterns that are likely to be taught first are the easiest to read. Sentences for patterns that are less common, and likely to be introduced later, are more challenging.

This volume is meant to be used as a reference manual, from which the desired patterns can be selected by the teacher. The vowel patterns are arranged in alphabetical order, to make it easy for the teacher to find the pages needed. The order of introduction of the patterns will vary, depending on the material being read by the student.

The teacher should introduce the patterns that are currently needed. Other patterns should be saved until they are encountered in stories or articles that students read.

Students learn best when they can connect the skills they are learning with a larger overall scheme. Relate each pattern to a word, poem, or story, and reinforce it with an activity or project. For instance, when teaching the pattern igh as in night, read Hildilid's Night or The Berenstain Bears Get In A Fight aloud. Write night or fight on the board and point out the igh pattern in the word. In addition, you may want to study animals that sleep during the day and stay awake at night, and have the student make a booklet about them. Or you may want to have students study concepts related to light by working with flashlights, mirrors, and prisms.

The material in this volume may be used in conjunction with any other reading program, to provide extra practice with vowel patterns as needed. It is recommended, however, that the teacher give guidance and support during the initial reading of each set of words and sentences, to help with comprehension and decoding.

Word Study Activities

1. Have students fold a piece of blank paper into sixths or eighths. Display words for the students to copy. They should write one word in each box on the paper and illustrate it. Advanced students can write sentences in each box.
2. Make a file folder game for students to use individually or in pairs. Use brightly colored file folders. Choose words from the list for a phonogram pattern recently taught. Glue small pictures illustrating the words in the folder. (These can be copied from the letter pattern worksheets from Sound City Reading.) Purchase a small specialty notepad. These can be purchased in school supply stores with various designs, such as boats, animals, barns, flowers, and so on. Write one word on each figure. Glue the figures to poster board and cut them out. Laminate both the folder and the figures. The student will read each word and place it on the correct picture in the file folder. It is helpful to make a file folder game for each phonogram that is studied. A student can use the folder independently, with a partner, or with the teacher.
3. Post some of the words and have the students write each word in a sentence.
4. Let the students choose a single word to use as a theme, and write a story or essay related to the word. Share the stories.
5. Post a list of words and have the students write a story containing as many of the words as possible. Share the stories.
6. Post a list of words and have the students draw a picture showing as many of the words as possible. For example a beach scene could show: a shell, a shark, shade under an umbrella, etc.) The student should use the posted words to label the items in the picture.
7. Make a set of sorting cards. Choose the desired vowel pattern, and write each word on a separate card. Have the students sort the cards, using classifications such as rhyming words, parts of speech, or various other categories.
8. Use the letter pattern worksheets from Sound City Reading. The worksheets give extra practice with many of the most common consonant and vowel patterns. Students match words and pictures, and copy words under the correct pictures.
9. Use the phonogram patterns to create weekly spelling lists.
10. Use a computer program to create crossword puzzles and word search puzzles for the words on a phonogram list. Have the students do the puzzles. Or have students create their own puzzles.
11. Write words from a phonogram list on separate slips of paper. Have each child select a slip and pantomime the word. The rest of the class guesses the word.
12. Have students take turns spelling words from a phonogram list by positioning their bodies to form the shape of each letter in sequence.
13. Select words from a list. Write each word on a separate unlined index card using colored markers. Write the vowel pattern being studied in a bright color, and the remaining letters in black. Have students take turns reading the cards. Students may hold any cards that they read correctly.

Sentence Study Activities

- 1) Copy the sentence pages onto transparencies to use with an overhead projector for working with an entire class. Uncover one sentence at a time for the class to read in unison.
- 2) Write the sentences on class size chart pads for use with a large group. Use a pointer to help students track the words.
- 3) Type the pages in large print on horizontal sheets of legal size paper, putting two or three sentences on a page. Punch holes in the top and make into a flip book to use with a group. Use pastel colored paper to prevent the sheets underneath from showing through.
- 4) Make enough copies of the sentences on a copy machine for each student to have a personal copy. Have students take turns reading the sentences aloud, then have the class read the sentences in unison. This can also be done in smaller reading groups.
- 5) Have students take turns reading the sentences to each other in pairs.
- 6) Have students pick a favorite sentence to illustrate. They should write the sentence at the bottom of a blank sheet of paper and draw a picture to go with it. Display these in the classroom or staple together to make a class booklet.
- 7) Have students choose a sentence to use for creative writing. The student will create a story or essay that contains the sentence. Have the student illustrate the story and read it out loud to the class.
- 8) Make a learning center using the sentences. Write or type the sentences on cards or strips. Draw simple pictures to illustrate the sentences on separate index cards. Have the students match each sentence with a picture.
- 9) Write a set of sentences on sentence strips. Put each sentence on a different color strip. Cut apart the strips, so that each word is on a separate piece. Arrange the words in a pocket chart, out of order. Have students arrange one sentence at a time so that it reads correctly.
- 10) Create a reading worksheet. Type each sentence, leaving blanks for the words containing the new sound pattern. List the missing words in a chart at the top of the page. Make a copy for each student. The student should read the sentences and fill in each blank with the correct word. This can be quite challenging for students!

We go to the gym to exercise every day.

The boys and girls learned to do cartwheels in gymnastics.

People must have oxygen to breathe.

Brad rode his bicycle to school last week.

A lynx is a wild cat with a short tail that lives in North America.

We heard beautiful music at the symphony.

The children sang several hymns at church last Sunday.

A pipe is a hollow cylinder.

The great pyramids are in Egypt.

Jocelyn likes to read mystery books.

Kathryn enjoys listening to country music.
